When John Pierpont died, the western ntinent lost her oldest living poet, and indeed one of the first, living or dead, to attain fame. John Pierpont practised law during the war of 1812, and published his first book of poems while Mad ison was President. His life ran through strange vicinsitudes. Copperionnsonism in Cleveland. The meeting of the little squad of John nites and Copperheads at the Kennard House, last night, to arrange for the conrention of recreant soldiers called to meet here on the 17th prox, deserves notice only as the first overt misoegenation of the Senter clique with the Democracy. The union was perfect and the harmony was delightful. Everything was levely. Senter and Armstrong were as gentle as sucking doves, and Grannis and Jo. Fitch reminded one of the predicted scene Ex-Governor Hahn, of Lemislans, is at present of the millennium, when the lion and the lamb shall lie down together. The only rivalry between the two factions was in enthusiasm for Johnson, and the race was neck-and-neck in this regard. The display of military names in the proceedings will be imposing to strangers, but will be appreciated by those who understand the perils and hardships of the service rendered to the country by "General" Fitch and "Colonels" Bliss, Senter Serville, &c. A family in St. Louis was recently greatly chagrined at having permitted the young ladies of the household to throw boquets to a party of seremaling negroes, believing at the time that they were their white admirers. When the minstrels were invited in the house to refresh them selves, the error was discovered.

The Davenport Gazette relates how a centioman and lady of that city became agaged for life, as was supposed; howall reparations were made for the happy vent by both parties, with an anticipated neymoon trip east; and how finally the honogeneous trip east; and now many the whole affair collapsed, broke down, be-cause they could not agree upon the per-son to the the hymenial knot—the lady claiming the privilege of being married by a minister, and the gentleman warmly insisting that none but a magistrate hould perform the ceremony for him, as marriage, according to his view, was simply a civil contract.
